If you live in Georgia and have a liability case, please call or email Joshua C. Canton.

Located in the Florida panhandle, Tallahassee is the capital of Florida. The city is home to Florida State University and Florida A&M University as well as many other public and private educational institutions. While government is a primary focus of the region's economy, agriculture and trade, manufacturing, high technology, leisure and hospitality, professional and business services, finance and construction are among Tallahassee's major industries. The region is well known for its scientific research and the world's largest and highest-powered research laboratory, the National High Magnetic Field Laboratory.

The Tallahassee office was established in 2002. It is strategically located 20 minutes from the Georgia border, which allows our attorneys to efficiently litigate in both North Florida and South Georgia. This location positions our firm to monitor important governmental and legislative processes taking place in the state's capital. The attorneys in our Tallahassee office, along with legal professionals working throughout our state-wide network, keep current with critical legal developments and regularly analyze and share information about important changes in the law that may impact our clients' businesses and operations.

Our Tallahassee attorneys counsel and defend clients in all types of civil defense matters, ranging from liability and complex coverage issues involving all types of insurance products to complicated administrative law matters, as well as workers' compensation matters. Our legal team strives to provide individual attention and personalized representation to each of our clients. We establish and maintain strong client relationships so that we can consistently deliver the high-quality and cost-effective legal services that our clients have come to depend on.
